Bernard (B)

My name is Bernard and I'm 32 years old. I'm a teacher at the village school. I go to work every day on my bike. When I'm not working, I like gardening. I grow lots of vegetables in our garden. Squirrels in Britain

There are two kinds of squirrel in Britain: the grey squirrel and the red squirrel. Britain is the natural home for the red squirrel. It has lived there for thousands of years. The grey squirrel came from North America in the 1870s. Today, there are about 140,000 red squirrels in Britain, but there are almost two and a half million grey ones. Grey squirrels are stronger, so they steal most of the food. There is also a disease which kills red squirrels but does not make grey squirrels sick. These are the reasons why there are more grey squirrels and fewer red ones.

All squirrels in Britain have tails. The English word 'squirrel' comes from an Ancient Greek word which means 'dark tailed'. Apart from the colour of squirrels, there are other differences. Grey squirrels are larger than red squirrels but reds have long hair on their ears. This makes their ears look bigger.

Squirrels make nests from leaves, sticks and grass. A squirrel's home, which is round like a football, is called a drey and this is where baby squirrels are born. Red squirrels usually live high up in pine trees because their favourite food is pine cones. Grey squirrels look for food on the ground and mostly eat seeds and nuts. You can see grey squirrels in parks and gardens, but you will probably never see a red squirrel.

For questions 1–3, please answer in complete sentences. (2 marks each)

1. Which type of squirrel is native to Britain?

2. How many grey squirrels are there in Britain?

3. Give one reason why there are more grey squirrels than red squirrels in Britain.
