A Surprising Discovery

Sophie and Conor both enjoy surfing. Last week they were in Ireland, trying to find big waves for surfing, when they saw a metal object on the beach. They thought it looked like a cola can. Sophie picked it up to throw it in the bin, but when she pulled it out of the sand, she was afraid as it looked like a bomb. Then they saw some strange writing on it and thought it might be a bottle of toxic chemicals. Conor used his phone to find out the meaning of the words. They meant 'time capsule' in Russian. A capsule is a box or container, which someone has filled with everyday objects. Then it is hidden, for someone else to find in the future.

When Sophie and Conor opened the capsule, they found letters and pictures from a modern camera. They showed people in a very cold place. Most of the letters were in Russian but there were two in English. Sophie and Conor learned that, two years before, Russian scientists were working in the Arctic. They made a hole in the ice and put the time capsule inside. The letters said that the scientists expected it to stay there for 50 or 100 years. However, Arctic temperatures increased, the ice melted and the capsule travelled across the sea to Ireland.

On the internet, Sophie and Conor found one of the scientists, Sveta. She was surprised when they messaged her, but not pleased about their discovery of the capsule. She said she was worried because it meant that the Arctic ice was melting much faster than they expected.
