Helping Pets Find New Homes

In New Jersey, USA, a 13-year-old boy has been helping animals find new homes by making clothing for them. Darius Brown did not start doing this to make money, but to improve his own physical skills. As a small child, Darius learned to speak later than other children and had problems using his hands. He was good at walking but putting on shoes was difficult. When he was eight, his older sister loved fashion and started to make simple but attractive items of clothing such as scarves and ties. His mum thought it would be a good idea for Darius to help because it would improve how he used his hands. He agreed, and several months later, Darius was designing, making and wearing his own colourful ties. People in the street often asked him where they could buy them.

He started a clothes company for pets. Soon after this, there was a big storm, which created a lot of problems. Many pets were separated from their families. Animal charities in the area had hundreds of animals that needed new homes because of the terrible weather and damage that was caused.

Darius wanted to help. He gave neckties free of charge to all the animals, which made them all look different. This helped the charities to find new homes for the animals. Since then, Darius has created about 500 neckties and has helped over 100 cats and 200 dogs to find homes. He is really glad he can raise money for animals and was even sent a letter of congratulations from former President Barack Obama for his charity work.

For questions 1–3, please answer in complete sentences. (2 marks each)

1. Why did Darius Brown start making items of clothing?

2. What did people in the street want to know?

3. How did Darius help to find new homes for animals?
