Julia Donaldson

Julia Donaldson is a famous English writer, who is best known for her children's stories. She lives on the Sussex coast in southern England, but she grew up in a huge house in north London. It was a very musical household as her father played the cello and her mother was a talented singer. Julia also read lots of poetry. Her father gave her The Book of a Thousand Poems for her fifth birthday and she loved it.

At school, Julia studied French and German, and got a teaching job in Italy as a teenager. While she was there, she learned this language too. She studied drama and French at university in England and began learning the guitar. There she made friends with a man called Malcolm, who later became her husband. He played the piano and was also a guitarist. They toured around Europe singing songs in the language of the country they were visiting.

After university, Julia got a job as a secretary for a radio station and during this time, she also wrote songs and stories. She sent her songs to BBC Television and they were used for several children's TV programmes. Her first book, A Squash and a Squeeze, was written in 1993, but it was The Gruffalo that is her most successful book of all. This was published in 1999. It has sold over 3.5 million copies and became a television film in 2009. It comes from a Chinese traditional story and has been made into a play for London theatres and for Broadway in New York.

Julia has written over 200 books and has plans for many more.

For questions 1-3, please answer in complete sentences. (2 marks each)

1. Where in England did Julia live as a child?

2. What musical instrument did Julia learn to play?

3. When did Julia's most popular story book first go on sale to the public?
