The Roaring Lion

A photograph of Winston Churchill, called The Roaring Lion, has been stolen from the Fairmont Hotel in Ottawa, Canada. In 1941, Churchill, the UK Prime Minister, was in Ottawa, giving a talk in the Houses of Parliament. Standing outside the room, waiting to take his photograph, was Yousuf Karsh, an American-Canadian artist. When Churchill appeared, Karsh behaved rudely towards him to get his attention. The photo shows Churchill looking angrily at Karsh because of this. It immediately became an extremely popular picture, which was recognised by many people.

Karsh took many photos of famous people such as President Kennedy and Albert Einstein, and kept these on show in the Fairmont Hotel. He favoured the hotel, working from an office there for eight years. He later lived there with his wife for 20 years. He gave the hotel The Roaring Lion as a gift. It stayed at the hotel for 24 years until it went missing.

Karsh signed his photos, including this one, so we know he was the original photographer. One day in July 2022, while talking to a guest, an employee noticed the frame around the outside of the picture was different, and he realised it was not the original photograph by Karsh. He spoke to the manager, who called the police. They asked as many guests as possible, past and present, to check their cameras. From their pictures, they managed to find out the date of the crime. The photo was stolen between December 2021 and January 2022 and has not been located since.

For questions 1–3, please answer in complete sentences. (2 marks each)

1. What was Churchill unhappy about?

2. How do we know that Karsh took the photograph, The Roaring Lion?

3. Who first discovered that the original photograph was missing?
